Press Release

For immediate release

Shary.be reacts to the fiscal agreement on carsharing. Nothing new in fact...

Brussels, October 25th 2015 – Shary.be would like to clarify the fact that the fiscal agreement published lately (called a ‘ruling’) doesn’t bring anything new and that the existing fiscal legislation already contains articles linked to rental of moving properties. With or without that ruling nothing changes for owners getting extra income.

A fiscal ruling consists in an agreement confirming how the law will be interpreted by fiscal administration. It is important to understand that the law hasn’t been changed and that what has been mentioned in the press lately is based on existing articles from the Belgian Income Tax Code (CIR, Codes des Impôts sur les Revenus in French).

When it says that income linked to carsharing are not considered as professional income... nothing new as these are – according to Belgian law – income from movable properties, according to article 17 (CIR) “. Professional or from movable properties these income have to be declared.

15% of the income can be considered as costs? This is just what article 3 (same law – CIR) is all about.

All these different aspects linked to carsharing income have been published for a while on Shary.be with a direct link to these articles (go to menu ‘Aide’... ‘Obligation de déclarer mes revenus’ – in french so far).

All the different limits mentioned in the agreement (max 2400€/year, 60 rental days max and one car per person) are this platform limits. Therefore if an owner doesn’t respect these he won’t be considered as an outlaw.

Shary.be hopes that this communication will reach our Government so that it will soon consider that the sharing economy requires a deep change for its future development.

Nevertheless Shary.be congratulates Caramigo for their work, sign of a world changing quickly.

Shary.be

Shary.be is the first FREE P2P platform for vehicles rental between private persons and professional users.

Since its creation in August 2014, the concept has evolved : on top of being free for everybody, you can rent on Shary.be everything that moves: Cars, trucks, bikes and motorbikes.

The working platform is online since September 28th 2015 (beta version). After around one month of internal tests, an advertising campaign will start in the beginning of November 2015.

More than 100 users preregistered before the platform was launched. They will be the firsts getting returns of that campaign.
